

Introduction and Comparison of Chinese Arbitration Institutions

Yuan Wang

The arbitration institutions related to China have growing significance to investors and businesspeople from both China and world-wide.

Besides the arbitration institutions located in the mainland China, their peers in Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan are also important in the global economy.

Although China-related arbitration institutions are becoming popular because of dispute settlement resulting from the increasing international commerce, they are not known to the international society. For the interest of investors of academia, this article introduces the most prominent arbitration institutions in the Greater China region in a comparative approach.
